iQuity

When you're a company that hosts fundraisers during off hours, flexible is the name of the game.

iQuity has crazy energy. We saw this in the first meeting when Nvvironment was hired to transform their office space hearing noises of crowds applauding or an explosion as code testing was completed. The Smith Brothers building in downtown Columbus made our job a whole lot easier. Keeping original brick walls and polishing up the concrete floors, softening with areas of carpet and woven vinyl in black and white with whimsical pops of teal and add to that some glass walls, benching and glitter-top bar in the kitchenette, we figured the software development team would have no trouble settling in.

iQuity's energy is altruistic and since these offices would be used for fundraising in the evenings, Nvvironment included plenty of modular seating options in the lobby and throughout the space. These modern furnishings not only fit seamlessly with the aesthetics of the rest of the office, but they make for easy space adjustments no matter what the evening holds.
