

The Future's So Bright...

On-Line Education

The school of tomorrow needs to have clear vision. Sounds like a recipe for daylighting.

When renovating a 70's era mall, lighting would normally be a problem. In these new offices, however, daylighting was introduced wherever possible by replacing the antique-yellowed mall skylights with crystal-clean ones. This change alone, not only drenches the offices in clarified sunshine, but it transports the offices straight into the future—illuminating the on-brand green with silver highlights throughout the interior.

With the disparity between mall halls and office halls, we corrected the gap between walls for the right feel while capturing back real estate for the offices.

And at one location in the oversized building, the best way to bring light into the space was to simply remove the roof. In keeping with the companies sustainable and wellness values, this new open courtyard under the open sky is filled with garden boxes.

Highlights

- Fixture Design
- Planning
- Signage Design
- Furniture Specification
- Lighting Design

